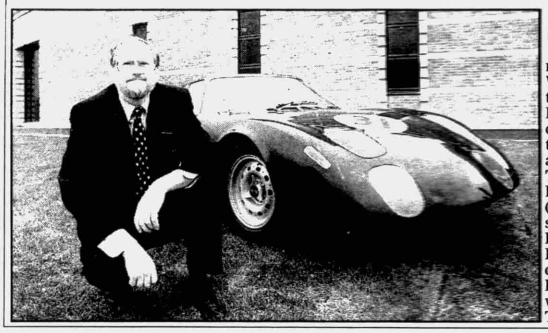
Our motoring heritage



One of the world's most exclusive and valuable cars will be on display at the new Heritage Motor Centre at Gaydon, Warwickshire which opens to the public for the first time on May 1.

It is the unique Rover BRM Le Mans racing car which astounded the world with its gas turbine 140mph performance in the mid 1960s and today is valued at more than £2 million.

The Rover BRM is one of 300 vehicles in the British Motor Industry Heritage Trust (BMIHT) collection which are on display in a striking £8 million building, part of the 65 acre Heritage Motor Centre complex.

It is the largest and most comprehensive collection of British cars in the world and the Heritage Motor Centre will be one of the world's top 10 historical automotive centres.

The Rover-BRM was built in 1963 and competed twice at Le Mans, driven in 1965 by Graham Hill and Jackie Stewart into 10th place — the highest placed all British car. It was the culmination of work on gas turbines carried out in the 1950s and 1960s by the Rover Car Company.

The Heritage Motor Centre traces the start of the British motor industry in the 1980s with Riley, Wolseley, Standard, Morris, Austin, Triumph, MG and Land Rover marques represented by the earliest vehicles and some fascinating prototypes which never went into production.

The Centre is run by BMIHT, a registered educational charity, supported by the Rover Group, Britain's biggest car company.

"We will be providing an entertaining day out for all the family as well as showing some of the finest and rarest British cars ever made," he said.

The Centre which has been designed for easy access for the disabled includes a well-stocked shop, a 100-seat cafeteria, landscaped picnic area and display ground suitable for car club rallies, autojumbles and other events. There is also a 4-wheel drive demonstration track on which Land-Rover will show off the abilities of their world-famous vehicles.

There has been a careful choice of supporting exhibitions which have been designed to interest all members of the family. These attractions will include an Engineering Gallery which, for the technically minded or simply those curious about how a car works, will house displays of engines, suspensions, transmissions and parts that go into a vehicle.

The Art and the Automobile display will show the relationship between style, design and the motorcar, putting the car in the context of its period. This gallery will have wide public appeal and will feature many fine objects d'art held by BMIHT.

With increasing interest being placed on the role of the car in society and its effect on the environment, the Motorcar and Society display will look at the work being carried out to make the car environmentally acceptable and will show the way the car has influenced society in the past 100 years.

As a registered charity the Centre has an important educational role, both for the serious researcher and for curriculum related work for schoolchildren.

The archive contains more than one million photographic images — including some early glass plate negatives — and several million technical and engineering drawings; production records and rare film of car manufacture and sales promotional material. There are two educational resource rooms, sponsored by AT&T Istel, and a full programme of educational activities is planned for school parties throughout the year. A reading room is provided for study of archive material.

The new Centre also has a range of conference facilities to cater for most types of meetings — from small informal gatherings to full product launches.
